What is the anticipated field size for the 2022 PGDC Race Weekend Events?

- When 2022 PGDC Registration opens, the participation caps for each distance will be as follows:

In addition to the in-person 2022 PGDC Race Weekend events, will there be a virtual option?

- We are not planning to offer a virtual option at this time. Our intent and focus are on safely returning the event back to the streets of Tampa in February 2022.

When will you share more details about what event attendees can expect for the 2022 PGDC Race Weekend (requirements, mitigation efforts, operational changes, etc.)?

- We recognize participants and members of the Tampa Bay community are eager to understand what the event will look like in February 2022.

While we're committed to sharing our plans, we want to do so in a measured way to ensure we're sharing updates that reflect what you will see race weekend. We are working to provide high-level updates in early November and will continue to share more specific guidelines throughout December, January and early February.

Other than a pandemic, what would prompt race organizers to cancel the 2022 event?

The 2022 PGDC Race Weekend could be canceled for circumstances beyond the Event's reasonable control, including, without limitation, war, epidemic, civil or political unrest, terrorism or severe inclement weather conditions.

It took the extreme circumstances of a pandemic to impact the 2021 PGDC Race Weekend. Prior to 2021 – for 43-years, the events have taken place as scheduled.
